Spark a Transformation

Sparks are small ignitions of inspiration that can fan into big changes, new directions, or fresh works. They come from deep down inside, yet make your body and mind shake with the excitement of the possibilities.

Personal Sparks

These are ones that you own. They are the ones that inspire your initiatives in your work outside of work. Personal soul sparks could be community activities, writing projects, or other things that are, well, personal. They make you unique in what you do and say and deliver personal satisfaction and a true sense of meaning.

Relationship Sparks

Relationships encompass many things from your spouse, partner, friends, kids, and others. These are the people who make you better and you them. When you talk to them, there is a fire that goes off inside. It may not happen every time, but they are the people that hold you up when you need support; love you when you are down; and challenge you when you are sliding by. Relationship sparks inspire core friendships and spirited conversations.

Leadership Sparks

These are the ones that give you that sense of direction in where to lead an organization, initiative, or team. Leadership sparks enliven your passion to move things forward, upward, over the humps, and across the distances. They deliver more than enlightened leadership as they harden your determination while spurring your abilities to work with people. Leadership soul sparks lift all up to achieve new things.

Career Sparks

Doing work is a part of our lives. Finding work that thrills us is always the challenge. Career sparks are those moments we come across that ticks off something inside in which, when we pull on it, it turns into something we want to spend our working hours doing, fully and passionately. Career sparks happen during our professional life, setting a new direction at times. They are the sources that keep our work on a purposeful track, rather just running around in lifeless circles.

How Can We Spark a Transformation

If you are feeling spark-less or soul-less, then you need to re-position yourself to experience them, listen to them, and act on them.

As a parent, leader, mentor, teacher, or coach, we should always try to position others to experience or spark. The more sparks around, the brighter the light in all that we do.
